A: In order to get INPA to respond to code remapping, one must install the latest Inpa software (relating to the model type in question), then re-install the BMW VIN plate. You can read more about the steps needed here: If you're having problems getting it to accept the factory code, there are two things you can try. First, if you're using an older Inpa model where the VIN plate is no longer available in the latest Inpa install, you may have to use the older Inpa. In this case, I'm not sure how to do that anymore. And second, it's been a while since I've used it, but there was a very serious flaw in the version of Inpa that came with the EA-90X, where if you installed the original Inpa install and later activated the new update, the old Inpa installed (that's the one that's currently installed on your car) would be the only version that ran (at least, it seemed that way - I couldn't get it to execute the new version). Hopefully, it's not too late for you to switch to the new version, which is free for download from Ediabas for a few more days, and which does not have this problem. 1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an apparatus for, and a method of, correcting a list of registered extension numbers arranged in a cellular mobile telecommunication network such as a public cellular mobile telecommunication network. 2. Description of the Related Art It is known that various classes of extension numbers are given out by a cellular mobile telecommunication network such as a public cellular mobile telecommunication network. As cellular mobile telecommunication networks are increased, the number of extension numbers is increased. Thus, it is not impossible that there are the same extension numbers given out by different cellular mobile telecommunication networks. In this respect, the conventional cellular mobile telecommunication networks have no means for distinguishing extension numbers given out by different cellular mobile telecommunication networks. Therefore, it is impossible that an extension number given out by a cellular mobile telecommunication network is registered in a cellular mobile telecommunication network. It is also impossible to add an extension number to a cellular mobile telecommunication network such that the extension number is registered
